Philip Dulhunty, OAM, has lived a life packed with adventure, narrow escapes from death and truly remarkable achievements in the realms of business, aviation and sailing. A self-taught engineer, his technical innovations and entrepreneurial drive have helped transform the face of the global electricity-supply industry. This autobiography traces Philip's story from his idyllic childhood at Port Macquarie through to his current role as a doyen of the power industry. Not only does it chart his highly successful career as a businessman, it also covers his army service during World War Two and the unforgettable period that he spent in atom-bomb devastated Japan with the Allied Occupation Forces. Written with Philip's trademark sense of humour, the book romps along. It's full of memorable anecdotes, dangerous encounters with hijackers, villains and crashing planes, and ends with Philip's compelling solution to one of Australia's greatest wartime mysteries.

It Certainly was NOT dull.

By Neil4

I have known Phil since the 1970's, and this book gave insites that I never knew.

His military background, Japanese occupation time, views of post atomic bomb Hiroshima as seen by a young soldier, etc. etc. is fascinating, and great Australian history.

His theory, supported by facts, of likely "Friendly Fire" sinking by US cruiser Chicago of HMAS Kuttabul in Sydney harbour, with the death of Australian sailors, makes the book a "MUST READ" for all Australians.
